The indictments are the result of an investigation made into the business methods of fish companies by District Attorney Kert, who charges the heads and other officials of the several companies with violations of the Cartwright anti-trust law. From the evidence presented to the grand jury, it appears that A. the grand juror, of the Western Paladini, the two other principal defendants, control the deep sea fishing industry in that they control the fish from the Paladini boats to a glue factory, with the fish trust, where the fish, many of them still alive, were sold at a nominal price for glue, while the remainder of the catch was disposed of to retail dealers.
